Civil Society or Shimin Shakai
Japan Foundation supports British-Japanese exchange projects during Japan 2001

The terms to describe it are ambiguous, if not misleading, but if we pause to think about civil society we cannot fail to recognize its importance to any developed, democratic nation. Civil society is the space in our lives beyond the family circle and independent of what government lays down, through regulation, and what business takes up, for commercial gain. It is, for example, the football clubs, the sports groups, the trades unions, the churches, temples and religious associations, the co-operatives, credit unions and educational organizations and it includes all those groups who have come together, without thought of securing financial profit for shareholders, for self-help, to promote a common cause or address common needs or to provide a joint response to the needs of others, near at hand or in other countries.

In the UK civil, or civic, society is often referred to as the charity sector, where it encompasses the 250,000 registered charities, or as the voluntary sector, so called because its objectives are not determined by the state.

More recently it is termed the community and social sector. In Japan organizations registered under the Civil Code are known as koueki houjin or public benefit juridical bodies. Although they may be non-governmental, many community organizations, which could not aspire to, or might not desire, that Civil Code status, are commonly called not-for-profit organizations, or NPOs, as defined under the 1998 NPO Law or, when promoting international aid or cooperation, as non-governmental organizations or NGOs.

Across a range of different areas Britain and Japan work together as partners to understand each other better and develop a more meaningful and mutually beneficial relationship. Learning to share experiences and information on how we respond to the needs of our own and other societies is an important part of this partnership. Links Japan, an independent non-profit organisation, promotes exchanges for this purpose. Two significant Links Japan projects were made possible during Japan 2001 through generous support from the Japan Foundation.

The first of these, organized with the Nihon NPO Center, was entitled “Local Government and Civic Engagement”. It explored the nature of the relationship between local government and the voluntary sector in both countries through a study tour around the UK, by twelve representatives of Japanese NPOs and local government, culminating in a conference, with the London School of Economics, involving a wide range of voluntary sector experts, local government officials and civil society academics. The background to the project was the devolution to local government in Japan of authority over local NPOs and the development in the UK of local level Compacts, following the model of the national Compact between central government and the voluntary sector which, while recognizing the value of the one to the other, sets out their mutual responsibilities and provides a forum for joint discussion of them.

The second project, Britain and Japan as Partners: Challenges for NGOs, brought to

To all readers and friends

The 18th of April 2002 was a splendid time for my first landing in the UK with my wife by your national flag-carrier. It was on a very sunny, and uncommonly cloudless day in the green of spring with the trees in full bud, when I took over from Mr Waketa, as Director of the London office. And I vividly remember a flower of which I am so fond was in bloom: the wisteria. My name is Kohki Kanno and I am thoroughly delighted to make your acquaintance... yoroshiku onegaishimasu.

Before I arrived I had learned that the banners of Japan 2001 (May 2001 to March 2002) had been streaming throughout the UK. I had also understood that during that period more than 2000 events had taken place, ranging from educational events to people-to-people programmes and that they had won the eyes and hearts of over three million British people. I can therefore confidently assume that you had experienced the very essence of both contemporary and traditional Japanese culture. Before I left Japan many Japanese people who had participated in these significant events commented warmly on the generosity and kindness of the British people and their love of tradition. This indicates that both our people have surely revitalized the friendship and mutual understanding that has always existed between us. The people-to-people exchanges developed by this event will bring new impetus, and the international amity between us will flow on like the river Thames. My sincere thanks to all those who were involved.

On the other hand, I must at the same time keep in mind the need to promote further the various academic and outreach activities between the UK and Japan. These activities are never as high profile but can become a solid and stable foundation for enduring relations between both our countries in any number of situations. With that aim, our academic exchange programmes and dialogues need to be encouraged and accelerated more and more.

Needless to say, this task cannot be accomplished by one person or indeed one organisation alone. Several players are required to participate in this academic arena. It is my desire therefore to qualify as a supportive and cooperative contributor in this ambition. I need your strong and friendly cooperation. I hope to support your initiatives as much as it is feasible and welcome your candid exchange of ideas with members of our staff.

Thank you very much.
Kohki Kanno
Japanese Studies
Evaluation of the Japan Foundation’s work

At the end of June a two-man team visited the UK to look at the Japan Foundation’s work in Japanese studies and specifically to assess the impact of our Staff Expansion Programme.

This programme is aimed at university departments wishing to expand their staffing expertise in Japanese studies and gives financial support towards the salary cost of new posts for an initial three years. Professor Koji Ueda of Tsukuba University and Mr Masayuki Suzuki of the Foundation’s Japanese Studies Division in Tokyo visited Birmingham University’s Japan Centre and the School of Oriental and African Studies. They also hosted a round table meeting with academics from some of the UK universities that had benefited from the programme.

The meetings were held against the background of recent calls from the Japanese Government for greater accountability, following the downturn in the Japanese economy. This has led to the need for the Japan Foundation, and indeed for other similar organisations, to attempt a more stringent evaluation of their work. Are our grant programmes properly targeted? Are they achieving the desired result? Are there areas in which the Foundation’s work can be more effective?

And in the UK the talks took place against a growing need to ensure the healthy survival of Japanese studies. All participants agreed that one of the greatest benefits of the Staff Expansion Support Programme was the opportunity it gave to UK universities to diversify and to consolidate disparate teaching into new fields for Japanese studies. Difficulties in maintaining the posts sometimes remained, however, because of budget constraints. Small university departments such as Japanese were particularly affected and recent moves towards devolved budgeting only served to exacerbate the problem. Overall, however, the programme, if properly researched in advance by the applicants, would seem likely to continue to benefit Japanese Studies in the UK.

All agreed that the Library Support Programme was one of our most effective programmes but that a priority area for the UK was the funding of good and promising students at postgraduate level, the successor generation of Japanese specialists. There was a need to ensure that they can study in the UK and remain here. The meeting also identified a growing demand for the funding of short research trips in Japan in the early stages of a Ph.D. programme.

As our new Director Mr Kanno indicates on page 1, the Japan Foundation will be looking carefully at its potential role in setting Japanese studies in the UK once more upon an upward path.

Forthcoming Book

Jomonesque Japan by Tatsuo Kobayashi and Simon Kaner

A fully-illustrated introduction to the archaeology of the Jomon period in Japan, this book explores the complex relationships between Jomon people and their rich natural environment. From the end of the last Ice Age 12,000 years ago to the appearance of rice agriculture around 400 BC, Jomon people subsisted by hunting, fishing and gathering; but abundant and predictable sources of wild food enabled them to live in large, relatively permanent settlements, and to develop an elaborate material culture.

In this book Kobayashi and Kaner explore thematic issues in Jomon archaeology: the appearance of sedentism in the Japanese archipelago and the nature of Jomon settlements; the invention of pottery and the development and meaning of regional pottery styles; social and spiritual life; and the astronomical significance of causeway monuments and the conceptualisation of landscape in the Jomon period. These ideas are considered in the light of current work in the European Mesolithic and Neolithic, setting Jomon archaeology within a global context.

The book draws extensively on new archaeological information from various parts of Japan, including the sites of Sannai Maruyama, Isedotai, and Komankino, among others. Extensive colour illustrations provide a vivid demonstration of Jomon ideology and creativity.

Tatsuo Kobayashi is Professor of Archaeology at Kokugakuin University in Tokyo and Director of the Niigata Prefectural Museum of History. He has excavated numerous prehistoric Japanese sites and is the leading authority on Jomon culture in Japan.

Simon Kaner is Assistant Director of the Sainsbury Institute for the Study of Japanese Arts and Cultures at the University of East Anglia.

The book will be a hardback with approximately 256 pages, 200 colour illustrations, and 25 b/w illustrations. It is due to be published in early in 2003.

The work has received a grant from the Japan Foundation under its Publication Assistance Programme.

JAPAN 2001

The Japan Foundation London office would like to record formally its sincere thanks to the Embassy of Japan, the Japan 2001 Secretariat and to all those throughout the UK who were involved in the organisation of Japan 2001.

It was a year of active exchange between the people of Japan and the UK and gave us the unique opportunity to sponsor and/or co-organise over 100 Japan 2001 events in differing areas of activity from the traditional to the contemporary. These ranged from the Chikamatsu-za Kabuki performances in London and Manchester and the Studio Ghibli film showings to the exhibition of Japanese Contemporary Art at the Hayward Gallery, the Shinto Exhibition and Symposium at the British Museum and the Manga touring exhibition and symposium; support for conferences such as the ‘Reporting Japan’ conference in Cardiff in April – which helped launch the year – to book publications and new initiatives in Japanese language support such as Homestay UK and the Japanese language teaching video Class Acts. This extraordinary year has given great impetus to our work in establishing a deeper understanding of Japan in Britain: we look forward to building it further.

Manga: Short Comics from Modern Japan

This Japan Foundation touring exhibition that was such a success during Japan 2001 is now showing in two parts at Sevenoaks Library and Sevenoaks Leisure Centre where there will be a chance to experience manga in its many forms: original artwork, video, playstation, comic stalls, manga drawing demonstrations, workshops and music.

For further information call 01732 453118 or 01227 823127 and for details of events, talks and workshops linked to the exhibition, contact Louise Pettifer on 01732 746227.

Onnagata: Female Impersonators in Asian Theatre and Dance

In February next year the Japan Foundation will be bringing to London a selection of dance performances by leading female impersonators from four Asian countries.

They are Zhao Zhiqiang from China, Pandit Gopal Dubey from India, Didik Nini Thowok from Indonesia and Masanosuke Gojo from Japan. They will be appearing at the Place Theatre 21st to 23rd February 2003 and in addition to the Gala Performances on Friday 21st and Saturday 22nd February at 20:00 will also be conducting workshops, two each on Saturday 22nd February and Sunday 23rd February 10:30 to 13:00 and 14:30 to 17:00.

Female impersonators have played a key role within the formation of traditional Asian theatre and dance and the programme will introduce not only the tradition of the art in their respective countries but will also look at the contemporary role they play within the performing arts of Asia.
